CONSERVATION: THE FUTURE OF BUILDING?

Conservation knowledge and skills have grown enormously over the past 50 years, and can now ensure practical futures for the most challenging historic buildings. Even so – and despite mainstream construction producing problematic buildings that are less long-lived and arguably less energy-efficient – conservation is still widely seen as a niche activity.

The 2018 ASCHB Conference looks at developments in building conservation through the lens of training and education, considering how we can maintain and nurture specialist expertise, and pondering how this could help the wider sector turn away from demolition and construction towards retention and adaptation. Come and join the debate!
